As part of this process, we will use your personal and health data to undertake risk stratification, also known as case finding. Risk stratification involves applying computer-based algorithms, or calculations, to identify those patients who are most at risk from certain medical conditions and who will benefit from clinical care to help prevent or better treat their condition. To identify those patients individually would be a lengthy and time-consuming process, which would by its nature potentially not identify individuals quickly and would increase the time to improve care. First Community use Sollis systems to identify those most in need of preventative or improved care. This contract is arranged by East Surrey CCG. We have implemented strict security controls to protect your confidentiality and recommend this as a secure and beneficial service to you.

<sup>ii</sup> * “Common Law Duty of Confidentiality”, common law is not written out in one document like an Act of Parliament. It is a form of law based on previous court cases decided by judges; hence, it is also referred to as 'judge-made' or case law. The law is applied by reference to those previous cases, so common law is also said to be based on precedent.

The general position is that if information is given in circumstances where it is expected that a duty of confidence applies, that information cannot normally be disclosed without the information provider's consent.

In practice, this means that all patient information, whether held on paper, computer, visually or audio recorded, or held in the memory of the professional, must not normally be disclosed without the consent of the patient. It is irrelevant how old the patient is or what the state of their mental health is; the duty still applies.

Three circumstances making disclosure of confidential information lawful are:

- where the individual to whom the information relates has consented;
- where disclosure is in the public interest; and
- where there is a legal duty to do so, for example a court order.
